Cease-Fire Holds in Beirut; Progress Reported in Talks

BEIRUT — A new cease-fire that stopped the most intense bombing yet of the Lebanese capital continued to hold Friday, and U.S. and Lebanese officials re-sumed talks on evacuating PLO forces from West Beirut.

Lebanese Premier Shafiq al-Wazzan, who has served as a link between Philip C. Habib and the Palestine Liberation Organization, told reporters after meeting with the special U.S. envoy at Leba-non's presidential palace that the plan seemed to be coming togeth-

Israel Expecting PLO Exit Next Week 'Technicalities'

down to the technicalities Mr. Reagan said at an informal question-and-answer session with reporters that his anger over Israel's bombing and shelling attacks Thursday had been prompted by the fact that negotiations on the departure of the PLO had been broken off by the attacks. He said that previous Israeli attacks on West Beirut had generally been the result of PLO violations of cease-fire agreements. Larry M. Speakes, deputy White House press secretary, said Mr. Reagan followed up his call with a letter that "amplified" on the conversation, but he gave no details.

Mr. Reagan, in his strongest statement since the start of the lsraeli invasion of Lebanon June 6, charged that the bombardment had jeopardized negotiations at "the point of success.

Mr. Begin told Mr. Reagan that his Cabinet had agreed to an 11th cease-fire even before his call. The United States joined the 14

The official in Jerusalem said Priday that Mr. Begin and his gov-ernment expect the Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas to start moving out of Lebanon next week, probably Thursday, and the multinational UN peacekeeping force to move in a few days later.

All of the guerrillas are expected to leave by land to Syria. From there, many of them will go to various Arab countries, including Jordan and Iraq, another Israeli official said.

The official said he understood the "chief sticking points at the Beirut negotiations now are Syria's reluctance to remove its men from Beirut and to give assurances that the guerrillas who stay in Syria will not show up later in Syrian-controlled territory in eastern Leba-

Mr. Begin, in an interview pub-lished Friday, said the withdrawal of the PLO from Beirut may lead to the departure of Syrian forces He told the Ma'ariv newspaper that it was an "insufferable situation" for Syria that Israeli forces are 16 miles (25 kilometers) from Damascus and that the capital was within Israeli cannon range. Israel has said repeatedly it will not withdraw its forces from Lebanon until the Syrians do. "Thus it is in the Syrian interest to leave Lebanon, so that we too will leave there," Mr. Begin said.

President Reagan spoke by telephone on Thursday from the White House Oval Office to Prime Minister Menachem Begin of Israel as Secretary of State George P. Shultz listened.

A Chronology of 2 Days of Crisis

About 6 a.m. Thursday (Beirut time) — Israclis begin bombing West Beirut. As raids continue, Lebanon's resemble. anon's premier, Shafiq al-Wazzan, tells Philip C. Habib, the special U.S. envoy, that talks cannot continue under the "blackmail and pressure" of the Israeli raids.

2 p.m. — The Israeli Cabinet meets. A message from President Reagan arrives, expressing "out-rage" and reportedly threatening to halt the Ha-bib mission. The message, saying the attacks had resulted in "needless destruction and bloodshed," is the sharpest statement by Mr. Reagan since the start of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon June 6. The Cabinet decides to end the raids and order new ones only if they are "essential" and have the specific approval of Prime Minister Menachem Begin, who would call a Cabinet meeting to ap-prove attacks "if he found it necessary." An Israe-li announcement said later that the Cabinet had already made a decision to end the attacks before the Reagan message was received.

4 p.m. — President Reagan tries for hour to call Mr. Begin but cannot get through. 4:50 p.m. — King Fahd of Saudi Arabia calls

Mr. Reagan, "expressing his concern over the situation in West Beirut." 5 p.m. — A new cease-fire goes into effect in West Beirut.

5:10 p.m. — Mr. Reagan reaches Mr. Begin for 10-minute telephone call. "He emphasized that Israel's actions halted Ambassador Habib's negotiations for the peaceful resolution of the Beirut crisis when they were at the point of success," a White House statement said. "The result has been more needless destruction and bloodshed."

5:40 p.m. - Mr. Begin calls President Reagan to say a "complete cease-fire" had been ordered. According to an Israeli communique, Mr. Reagan "expressed his gratitude, and the conversation ended with the words, 'Menachem, shalom.' "

Portugal Changes Its Constitution To Strengthen Civil Government

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches
LISBON — Portugual's parliament has voted to change the country's Marxist-inspired consti-tution of 1976, abolish a powerful military oversight conneil, and put more power in the hands of the majority Democratic Alliance gov-

With the vote Thursday, the ruling rightist alliance can now put through its plans to alter radically the country's economic system without direct military participation in the government.

Premier Francisco Pinto Balse-

mão has already announced a 26point plan to cut back the large public sector, a legacy of Communist nationalizations in 1975. "We have now created the conditions ... for access by private enterprise to areas previously denied it such as banking and insurance," he said following the vote.

Military Unit Scrapped

Throughout Portugal's first six years of democracy, the military Council of the Revolution, now abolished, had retained power to veto civilian-made laws and has rejected as unconstitutional four previous attempts to allow private

Francisco Pinto Balsemão

Under terms of the rightist coalition's deal with the Socialist Party to produce the needed majority. the clause making nationalization irreversible remains in the new constitution. But the government is no longer pledged to nationalize.

The government also assumes power over the armed forces together with a defense council still to be set up.

The biggest remaining question concerns the plans of President António Ramalho Eanes. In January, Gen. Eanes threatened to resign and form his own political party if his powers were curbed too radically. Although the curbs are not as great as his supporters first feared, the president's powers have been diluted.

The Soviet-aligned Communist Party, which fought a long battle against the changes with strikes and demonstrations, has labeled the move a "constitutional coup d'etat" paving the way for a rightist takeover of the government. "This revision has handed dangerous arms to reactionary forces, acting against democracy," Communist parliamentary leader Carlos Brito said during the debate in the Assembly of the Republic. Under law, the new constitution goes to Gen. Eanes for his signature within 30 days. An outright presidential veto, or Gen. Fanes failure to sign the legislation dur-ing the stated period, would send the document back to parliament for another vote, which also re-quires a two-thirds' majority for passage.

With another 30 days' wait after final action, Portugal's new constitution is expected to go into effect sometime in October.

U.S.-New Zealand Pact On Tax Goes to Senate

United Press International WASHINGTON - President Reagan Friday submitted to the Senate for ratification a treaty between the United States and New Zealand to avoid double taxation of, and tax evasion by, citizens of the two countries.

The White House also announced that Mr. Reagan sent to Capitol Hill a renegotiated fishery agreement between the United States and Spain to replace bilateral pacts that expire this year.

In 10 weeks of combat missions, the Israeli Air Force has lost one A-5 Skyhawk and one F-4 Phantom jet. These aging, Americanbuilt aircraft are being phased out of the Israeli arsenal and being replaced by F-15 and F-16 jets, which remained unscathed in the fighting in Lebanon.

Israel also lost two helicopters.
Military officials have not disclosed how much other equipment was lost in the fierce tank duels with the Syrians in eastern Lebanon early in the war, but they are thought not to be unduly large. In contrast, Israel's major equip-ment losses in the 1973 war totaled 105 aircraft and 800 tanks. The value of lost equipment alone equ-aled Israel's gross national product that year, according to Mr. Pless-

The cost of the war in Lebanon is now about 7 percent of the Israeli GNP, he added.

Without Desperation The relatively light losses have allowed Israeli officials to look at the question of outside aid in political and ideological terms rather than, as was the case in 1973, as a desperate necessity.

"I think Israel would be stupid to request additional aid because of the war." Mr. Plessner said.
"Obviously, this war is not particulated to the same of the same o larly popular with the rest of the world. Since despite that fact Israel decided to execute the war the way we have, it is better to do it on our own strength."

The United States currently supplies Israel with $1.4 billion in mil-itary grants and credits and $785 million in economic aid, which goes into Israel's general treasury funds. For the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1, President Reagan has requested the same amount of eco-nomic aid and an increase in the military support to $1.7 billion.

The war came home to Israeli citizens this summer in the form of higher taxes and sharp increases in the price of basic commodities bread, milk, margarine, eggs, poul-try and public transportation — as ernment reduced its subsi-

Cutting Expenditures Israelis are able to live with such price increases, because almost all wages in the country are indexed to the rising cost of living.

In addition to slashing subsidies. the Begin government is planning to cut other expenditures by about $140 million. Last month it also increased the value added tax from 12 to 15 percent and imposed a series of relatively minor temporary taxes specifically to pay for the

But the most important element in the government's plan to finance the war is a "compulsory war loan." Under the measure, es-timated to produce $650 million, Israelis will have 4 percent of their gross incomes taken from them in the next nine months as an inter-est-free "loan" to the government. The money is to be repaid over a 12-year period, but with inflation in Israel running at a 117 percent a year, its value at the end of the loan period could be negligible.

Israeli officials say they are con-fident that these measures will more than cover the costs of the war in Lebanon, which can be financed over a number of years. This, of course, assumes that the fighting around Beirut will end soon and that the Israelis will not encounter major new war costs in the months ahead.

West Berliners paid tribute to 180 persons who have died at the wall since its construction began, Aug. 13, 1961, laying wreaths at places along the 102-mile (165-kilometer) barrier and holding a memorial service at the spot where Peter Fechtner, 18, was killed by gunfire in 1962.

Suzuki Sets Book Dispute Deadline

TOKYO — Premier Zenko Suzuki Friday gave his foreign minister and education minister a week to resolve a dispute over the rewriting of wartime history in school textbooks.

Two Japanese government officials returned Friday from Peking and told Mr. Suzuki that China took a firm and severe view of the textbook changes, which play down Japanese aggression and atrocities up to and during World War II. The officials had gone to Peking in an effort to end the controversy before Mr. Suzuki's scheduled trip to China next

After hearing their report, the premier told Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi and Education Minister Heiji Ogawa to solve the problem within a week. The textbook issue has also caused friction between Japan and North and South Korea.

Cleric Calls For Ghotbzadeh's Death

LONDON - Sadegh Ghotbzadeh, the former Iranian foreign minister, should be swiftly tried and executed for his role in a plot to over-throw Iran's clerical regime, Ayatollah Sadeq Khalkhali said Friday. Speaking in a telephone interview from Tehran, Ayatollah Khalkhali, who has ordered the execution of hundreds of people as head of the revolutionary courts since the 1979 revolution, said, "If I were the judge, I would sentence him to death after a one-minute trial."

Mr. Ghotbzadeh, accused of masterminding a plot to kill Iran's spiritual leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, will go on trial Saturday at Tehran's top-security Evin prison. Shortly after his arrest in April, Mr. Ghotbzadeh confessed to his involvement in the plot in an interrogation broadcast on Iranian television.

Rival Gangs Clash at Naples Prison

NAPLES — Hundreds of police were called to the Poggioreale prison Friday to break up a battle between rival Camoura crime gangs. Police said at least three prisoners were wounded - one shot and two stabbed — and another was treated for shock.

Roads around the prison were sealed off while about 100 Carabinieri and 200 police moved in to quell the fighting, police said. According to first reports, about 300 prisoners belonging to rival gangs started fighting in the exercise yard and later barricaded themselves in their respective wings of the prison.

The prison has recently been the scene of protests, officially against against the transfer of Camorra inmates to remote prisons in Sardinia.

N.Y. Board to Return Banned Books

LEVITTOWN, N.Y. - The board of the Island Trees Union Free School District, whose banning of nine books from school libraries nearly seven years ago touched off a national controversy, voted Thursday night to return the books to the shelves.

But the board said in a formal statement that librarians would be required to send notes to parents whose children check out the books in the four Nassau County communities it covers. The board's removal of the books, which include "The Fixer" by Bernard Malamud, which won the Pulitzer Prize for fiction in 1967, and "Slaughterhouse-Five," by Knrt Vonnegut Jr., had been challenged by five students.

In June, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that a trial was warranted to determine whether the board's action had violated the students' First Amendment rights to freedom of speech. In its statement, the board indicated that it was seeking to avoid a trial and to end a controversy that had been divisive in the largely white and middle-class district and overshadowed other school-district business.

Nkomo to Discuss Zimbabwe Security

HARARE, Zimbabwe — Joshua Nkomo will confer this weekend with his opposition party, the Zimbabwe African People's Union, on ways of reducing tribal and political tensions in southern Zimbabwe, party sources said Friday. Mr. Nkomo will report on his talks last week with Prime Minister Robert Mugabe about the worsening security caused by banditry and armed attacks by political dissidents, the sources said. They said he might soon announce a tour of the south to persuade his supporters not to aid bandits and dissidents.

Kenya Detains Parliament Member

NAIROBI - An outspoken member of Kenya's Parliament has been detained under government security laws, the first serving politician to be held in a series of arrests that began in June.

The government announced Friday that Michael Koigi Wamwere had

Mr. Deng, who has guided Chi-na's flexible economic policies and its opening to the West since 1978, has long sought to get around the aged and conservative Politburo, the party's supreme policy-making unit that has responsibility for day-to-day operation of the huge Communist apparatus.

Politburo's Power

The 24-member Politburo's power would be shifted to another party unit, known as the Secretariat, which Mr. Deng had reconstituted in 1980 to take over some of the party's administrative work. Analysts said the Secretariat would be enlarged by the appointment of Mr. Deng's allies and would be headed by the party chairman, Hu Yaobang.

If Mr. Deng's plan is adopted, the posts of party chairman and deputy chairmen would be abolished and the party would thus be organized along the lines of the Sopower in the Secretariat.

SAN FRANCISCO — California apparently has won its two-year, $95-million war against an invasion of the Mediterranean fruit fly that threatened billions of dollars in fruits and vegetables, officials said.

vailed Thursday at a House-Senate nerve gas production and the MX missile from a compromise military authorization bill for fiscal 1983.

The House had voted to forbid nerve gas production, while the Senate had out MX funds. Both provisions were dropped in favor of President Reagan's positions.

In another victory for Mr. Reagan and the Pentagon, the con-ference wiped out a House-passed provision to deny money for mili-tary programs that would undercut existing arms control agreements. The amendment might have stopped the Pentagon from de-ploying MX missiles close together in the so-called "dense pack" pattern.

With those major decisions, the conference committee of senior members of the House and Senate Armed Services committees appeared to be well on its way to authorizing about $177 billion for the development and production of weapons in fiscal 1983.

Still to be decided was whether to direct the Air Force to buy the Lockheed C-5 or the Boeing 747, or a mixture of both, as its new long-distance transport plane.

Another remaining question was whether the full House and Senate will accept the changes made in the defense bill, as is usually the case. And Congress still must decide how much of the money authorized will be appropriated.

Nerve gas production is the most emotionally charged of the is-sues in the military authorization bill. The administration contends that resuming nerve gas produc-tion is the best way to deter the Soviet Union from using nerve gas. Opponents counter that the United States has plenty of nerve gas stored for deterrence purposes and that producing more would inten-sify the arms race.

The Senate, on a 49-45 vote, had rejected an amendment that would have denied the $54 million the administration requested for nerve gas production. The House, however, had voted 251 to 159 against As part of the appropriation process, the House Appropriations Committee on Wednesday voted to deny $18.3 million that the administration had requested to build a nerve gas factory in Pine Bluff, Ark. On the MX issue, the Senate had held back $1.5 billion that Mr. Reagan had requested to produce the first nine missiles. It also had deleted $715 million requested to study temporary basing for the MX. The administration had said the study temporary basing for the missiles. it believed those first missiles would be put into existing Minuteman silos, but added that other basing schemes were still being considered. The Senate decided that the money should be withheld until the president decides where to put the missiles.

The House had rejected amendments to cut the administration's MX request, including the money for producing the first nine missiles. Sources said the House's MX position prevailed in the conference with relatively minor modifi-

The postal plan that riled them calls for moving postal operations to remote areas to continue mail handling and providing fallout protection for postal bigwigs and workers. Under the plan, the Postal Service also would pass out emergency change-of-address cards, help censor international mail and register fed-eral workers and enemy aliens. But it would have to stop handling food stamps, passports and migratory bird stamps.

"This whole civil defense scheme is the most exregious waste of the taxpayers' money I have ever witnessed," said Rear Adm. Gene La Rocque of the Center for Defense Information. "Worse than the waste of money is the fact that the civil defense program serves to create the impression that ouclear war is fightable, winnable and survivable."

Rep. William L. Clay, Democrat of Missouri, told the postal people their idea was "lunatic."

While the Postal Service feels confident about its plan, there apparently is more doubt at the IRS, which is trying to work out a post-disaster tax-collection scheme.

Scrap Income Tax

A memo circulating at the Department of Treasury, prepared by tax analyst Gary Robbins, suggests that a ouclear disaster would destroy many government and private tax records and a post-war government in all likelihood would have to scrap the income tax.

The easiest solution would be a national sales tax geared to the amount of money the government needed to make things work again. He suggested a tax of

WASHINGTON — House and Senate conferees have gotten down to serious negotiations on taxes after reaching final agreement oo $17.5 billion in Medicare, Medicaid and welfare cuts over the next

Final approval of the cuts cleared the way for an attempt to complete work on legislation to raise taxes by $98.9 billion over the next three years. The bill had been stalled by House attempts to restore some welfare cuts pushed through Congress by President Reagan last year, but the House conferees finally yielded to Sen. Russell B. Long, the Louisiana Democrat, and dropped the restorations provisions.

In the one major action oo the tax provisions, the conferees nearly tripled a proposed minimum tax on the wealthy. The new tax would make an estimated 280,000 people —who now pay little or nothing to the federal government — pay a more than $650 million a year, starting in 1984. This amounts to more than $2,000 in new taxes for each of these individuals.

Three-quarters of the $17.5 billion in benefit cuts the conferees approved Thursday night would be in the Medicare programs of health care for the elderly.

An effort by the House members of the committee to restore some of the welfare money that was cut last year had tied up the conference for two days. The Senate refused to accept the changes on the ground that such spending increases had no place in a spending-cut hill.

In the end, the House backed down, and the package of spend-ing cuts was approved without dis-

The tax bill places most of the burden of raised levies on corporations. The proposal to ease this burden is the first clear demonstration of the increasingly intense lobbying by the business commu-nity to change the content of the

The package would take back about 24 percent of the $418 billion in tax cuts that Congress voted last year for business and individuals in 1983 through 1985. While it would not disturb the ba-sic across-the-board cut in personal tax rates, it would cancel one third of the corporate reductions,

Sharon and the Cabinet

Israel's defense minister, Ariel Sharon, is a nuclear reactor or by promoting settlements pifted soldier, a blunt politician and a disasgifted soldier, a blunt politician and a disastrous diplomat. It is not the PLO but a nearunanimous Israeli Cabinet that now accuses him of sabotaging the peace effort in Lebanon, acting without approval and damaging Israel's image abroad by unleashing Thursday's ferocious attack on West Beirut. What is Israel doing to itself?

Those air strikes and the Israeli advance into northern Lebanon seemed calculated to disrupt, just at the point of success, the intri-cate peace negotiations of President Reagan's envoy. Philip Habib. This was no small affront to Israel's American supporters. For the first time, an outraged Mr. Reagan is saying out loud what he has confided in private correspondence with Prime Minister Begin that United States support may be firm but it is not unconditional.

If Sharon behaves as if he alone is judge of Israel's interests, some part of the responsi-bility attaches to Menachem Begin. The prime minister has repeatedly strained the difficult partnership with the United States, whether by authorizing the bombing of Iraq's sigence to his opponents. Now his defense nister applies the same style to dealing with his own government.

Israel has had no prouder claim than its record as a flourishing democracy committed to humane values. "Every soldier is a civilian," goes the adage, "and every civilian is a soldier." Israelis have dismissed as abourd any suggestion that a country meant to be the Athens of its region could become a Prussia. Indeed, Sharon was denied the job of chief of staff because of his insubordination as a field commander in two previous Israeli wars, Sharon has again struck out on his own in the Lebanon siege, ignoring his Cabinet col-leagues if not his prime minister. He succeeded in outraging even hard-line Cabinet mem-bers. Over his objections, a halt has been or-dered to the Beirut bombings and his authori-ty has been restrained. But not before much has been put in jeopardy, most importantly the complicated Habib disengagement plan. Sharon knows how to make war; he should no longer be allowed to dive-bomb the peace.

Salesmen in Uniform

Frank Carlucci, the U.S. deputy secretary of defense, has now instructed the military services to get busy and help sell American fighter planes to foreign governments. The idea is, apparently, that salesmen in uniform are more effective than mere civilians working for the aircraft companies. It is not enough to let foreign nations know what the new fighters can do. "We must go further," he has written, "and actively plan with the nations for sensible acquisitions."

The Carlucci order strengthens the impression that this administration is rapidly losing any sense of proportion in all questions of weapons sales abroad.

To thrust this salesman's job onto the services requires an unwholesome blurring of distinctions between military responsibilities and commercial favors for private compa-nies. It is bad enough to allow the two to become confused in the minds of foreign officials dealing with American military officers. It is worse to encourage that confusion in the officers' own minds,

That line, it is hardly necessary to say, has occasionally been badly blurred in the past and those experiences testify to the risks. You would think that the Reagan administration might remember, in particular, the AWACS imbroglio last year.

That originated in a suggestion by overeager Air Force generals to the Sandis of having their own about the desirability of having their own AWACS planes. When the Saudis began sing the idea in Washington, the Israelis bitterly protested that the planes and their radars would constitute a dire threat.

At that point, the actual military capacities of the planes became irrelevant. As is customary in these affairs, it became, for both governments, a test of which of them the United States would accommodate in preference to the other. That is a wretched way for the United States to conduct a foreign policy.

Mr. Carlucci's instructions, incidentally, identify 11 countries as promising prospects, measured in terms of their sense of danger, their ambition and their ability to pay. Six of the 11 are in the Middle East, where there are two wars in progress.

Mr. Carhicci may recall that a succession of Defense Department officials, through most of the 1970s, justified the sale of a fleet of F-4 Phantom fighter-bombers to Iran on grounds that it was necessary to guarantee the stability of the Gulf region. The Iranians currently seem to be getting good mileage out of their Phantoms.

The Carlucci order is evidently intended to do a favor to one company in particular. The Northrop Corp. has invested heavily in a new fighter, the F-5G, now in production, for which it has no buyers in the United States or abroad so far. Mr. Carlucci seems to think that the military services ought to give Northrop a little help. But he is offering more than he, or anyone in the Defense Department, ought to deliver.

Reagan's Tax Stance

President Reagan's reluctance up to now to make the unpleasant decisions required to cut the budget deficit has had extremely damaging consequences at home and abroad. So it is encouraging that he is now giving his support to a measure that is before Congress to increase company and indirect taxes over the next three years.

He is nonetheless pressing ahead with his program of personal tax cuts. The subtleties of increasing taxes in one area and cutting them in another will not easily be appreciated by an American electorate that is becoming more and more disturbed by the state of the

U.S. Overtures to Southern Neighbors

• White House Seeks Closer Ties to Chile's Military Rulers

By Kenneth Freed

SANTIAGO — Reagan administra-tion officials have been making pilgrimages here recently, seeking better relations with Chile and hoping to find grounds to support a decision to resume arms sales to the hard-line military dictatorship of Gen. Augusto Pinochet.

The process raises questions both about the need for improved relations and the U.S. commitment to seek decent buman-rights practices by rightist, anti-Communist governments.

The administration has sought to redefine U.S. dealings with military redefine U.S. dealings with immary regimes in South America, particular-ly toward ending the isolation im-posed on Chile by the Ford and Carter presidencies. On the basis of recent interviews with American and Chilean officials in Washington, it is clear the Reagan administration wants to certify that the Pinochet regime has improved its human-rights record and should be allowed to buy American arms. But it is clear that continued U.S. congressional opposition is forcing the administration to move slowly.

WASHINGTON — In the past few weeks, State Department officials have been quietly making the rounds on Capitol Hill, trying to convince skeptical committees that now is the time to increase assistance to Argentina, the time to resume military sales.

The testimony is carefully drafted in State Department generality. But despite itself, it is evidence of how careless is the government's policy toward Latin America.

Reagan, former Secretary of State Alexander Haig and United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, for all the ways they were able to disagree, appear to have been in genuine agreement on the basic points of hemispheric Before the 1980 election, Reagan and Kirkpatrick reveled in ridiculing President Carter's policy toward Latin America, a policy that relied on the influence and goodwill of the so-called Andean democracies, Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador, and Peru, while it avoided friendly involvement with the Southern Cone dictatorships in Paraguay, Uruguay, Chile, and, especially, Argentina. Patricia Derian (assistant secretary of state for human rights) and her minions in Carter's burnan rights office are making a mess of relations with the planet's seventh-largest country, Argentina, a nation with which we should be close friends," said a column syndicated to newspapers in 1978 under Reagan's name.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick, in the now-famous Commentary article that reportedly got ber the UN ambassadorship, accused the former administration of failing to take into account the "fragility" of Latin societies, of turning a cold, puritanical shoulder on governments besieged by leftist terrorism. She was particularly angry about the Carter administration's refusal to back the crumbling Somoza regime in Nicaragna. And she ridiculed the Carterites for their coup that blocked a government with a significant Communist-Castroite component," she wrote.

Regarding 'Salvador Leaders Warned by U.S. on Use of Torture' (IHT, July 27): During the months when the press concentrated on the torture and killings of civilians in El Salvador by paramilitary forces, the Reagan administration instead of expressing concern, complained about bias of the media. Now new detailed reports of particularly vicious torture have turned up. Close to 3,000 political murders have been committed during the first half of this year alone. Roberto D'Aubuisson, El Salvador's new leader, once said in an unguarded moment that it might be "necessary" to kill hundreds of thousands. Human rights in El Salvador do: not exist, and it is the American taxpayer who has to support the carnage with his money.

ARTS/LEISURE

Recession Catches Up With Antique Dealers in Paris

By Source Melikian

ational Harold Tribune PARIS—No place in Europe seems as cleverly placed as the Louvre des Antiquaires, "The Antique Dealers' Louvre," to withstand the shock of an economic crisis. More than 150 dealers offer their wares in every field from 17th century Italian furniture to Art Deco. Located in the former Magasins du Louvre, it runs parallel to the Louvre the real one — on the other side of the Rue de Rivoli, and it has its main entrance on the place du Palais Royal, within walking distance of some of the most luxurious Paris hotels. One would expect every art and antique comscious visitor from abroad to slip in for a browse, between the more sections sessions across the street.

of despondency is perceptible in a profession traditionally trained to suggest that all is well in the best of worlds. More stands seem to have closed for the August vacation this year, including the two specializing in Old Master

Ta Petite Chaise is run on a modest scale by a young man who loves drawings, can't afford to buy anything expensive and largely goes in for 19th-century drawings of every school, mostly priced from 200 to 3,000 francs (about $28 to $422). The other is run by de Bayser, a collector who gave up his former profession to turn to dealing in his field. He sells more ambitious works— Italian mannerists, some 17th-century Northern European pieces, fine 18th and 19th-century works of the French school. His clientèle would obviously be very different from that of his younger colleague — well-to-do French-men from the provinces, rich foreign tourists. But neither he nor his colleague thought it worth their while to sit it out at the Louvre des Antiquaires in August.

The managing partner, Jean Lostalem, speaks of the shump in a smiling, detached way. Sales were reasonably good until mid-May. The French devaluation resulted in a psychological shock. In Lostalem's view, Frenchmen feel name. Her manner has a mixture of old-style discreetness their money is worth less and they need more of it for essentials. His Arab clients stopped coming after the inva-sion of Lebanon — the Lebanese and other Arabs as well. July was a disaster. He could think only of a Frenchwom-an, a customer of many years' standing, who bought a Tibetan ritual dagger made from meteorite iron — a superb piece — for 10,000 francs. But that was not really a collector's fit of enthusiasm. The buyer, Lostalem said with a glint in his eye, "practices the magical art. She uses

August hardly looks better, although Lostalem had just sold an Iranian helmet of the 19th century - to a Mexition, is the focal point of her display.

However, those with a good stock are also having a tough time. Colette Aubimère is an antique dealer of the and lifelong experience that allows her to express her appreciation of pieces she particularly cares for, without seeming to boast of them.

On her stand is one of the gems of the Louvre des Antiquaires, a commode in purpleheart veneer inlaid with a yellow wood scroll-and-garland pattern in the neoclassi-cal taste. It ranks among the finest pieces of the Louis XVIII period that I recall seeing. At 68,000 francs it is inexpensive. Yet, Madame Aubinière notes, she originally bought all the bedroom furniture made en suite -- includ ing the dressing table, the small one-door wardrobe, the bed, the bedside table - and tried vainly to sell it as a set.

oed, the oedside table — and tried varily to sell it as a set.

It took her months to dispose of the pieces separately.

Io her estimation it is now considerably easier to sell run-of-the-mill pieces than splendid rarities. For instance, a bronze inkwell stand designed as a naturalistic serrated tree leaf, with the crystal inkpot inserted into the sprig, is a delightful late 19th-century object priced at 1,300 francs—under $200. Even in these hard times it is not a great deal of money. It almost looks as if the sophisticated class deal of money. It almost looks as if the sophisticated class of buyers with an eye for high quality had lost interest. In this respect, the trade is experiencing the effects of a trend that has been noticeable at auction in the past few

In addition, it suffers from a lack of self-confidence. Insufficient advertising surely accounts in part for the limited foreign attendance at the Louvre des Antiquaires. It currently has a charming exhibition on the theme of the bird, a good many of the items coming from dealers and being accordingly for sale: an excellent idea, adding spice to the visit. But when I walked into the exhibition space — it is well laid-out, and refreshingly cool, thanks to good air cooditioning - I had it all to myself for a half-hour.

Superior to the Flea Market in many respects — it is accessible, clean, more businesslike — the Louvre des Antiquaires resembles the Flea Market in many others. Many dealers have switched from the one to the other, and the supply sources are often the same - the Drouot auctions. to name but one. Yet my guess is that there are three times as many foreigners at the Flea Market at any one time. The trade has yet to master the art of public relations and

By Michael Gibson

PARIS — Leonardo da Vinci drew, sketched and wrote abundantly (writing left-handed and backwards in brown ink), and his surviving manuscripts are pre-served in several cities: Milan, which has the 1,000-page Codex Atlanticus and the Trivulzianus; Turin, which fell heir to the manuscript on the flight of birds; Paris, where the Institut de France owns shorter manuscripts; London, where three small notebooks are kept in the Victoria and Albert cum and the Arundel Codex is in the British Museum; and as a result of a recent sale, Los Angeles, where the Leicester Codex has been renamed the Hammer Codex. Finally, the Royal Library at Windsor Castle has 600 of Leonardo's drawings, including the major part of his anatomical studies.

Milan is now displaying a selection of drawings by Leonardo (from the Codex Atlanticus) and his circle at the Pinacoteca Ambrosiana and a splendid assortment of nature studies, on loan from Windsor Castle at the Castello Sforzesco (both to Oct. 17). Meanwhile, the Hammer Codex, after a showing at the Musée Jacquemart-André in Paris, is going to Edinburgh (Aug. 20 to Sept. 11 at the Royal Scottish Academy).

The most surprising thing about Leonardo's writings is that, for all accepted a present he gright hours.

practical purposes, he might have put them into a time capsule for 300 years. Not until the 19th century did scholars get to see them, and oot until then did the technical means begin to be available with which to produce some of the inventions he conceived and de-

Leonardo invented, for instance, a system that would allow a burgan to breathe under water, but he was careful not to describe it in his writings because, he explained, "man, as a result of his perversity, would use it for murderous ends. diving under water and making breaches in the hulls of ships in order to sink them with their crews."

He was an encyclopedic observer of nature, and his notes on astronomy, geology, paleontology, bydraulics and so oo reveal that he was a man of infinite patience and piercing intuition. But all this work remained unknown until it could no longer add anything of practical value to what science had learned. As a result, the viewer may be inclined to consider Leonardo and his work with a sort of pointless awe, as though looking at the intellectual equivalent of the tallest man in the world. This is a sterile approach. It is certainly more amusing and enhightening to try to get closer to Leonardo by grasping at least some aspects of how his mind and fantasy worked. The exhibitions in Milan and Edinburgh allow some The Hammer Codex is least interesting in visual terms, since it is composed of 18 folios of closely written, illegible notes with sketches in the margins. It is surprising that oobody used simple photography to invert the writing in the reproductions for the catalog, so as to let the reader try his luck with the difficult script.

Leonardo's method seems to have been the result of an unusually activated reverie. Any small boy living in the neighborhood of a way the currents behave and the water flows. Leonardo clearly did as much as a child, just as he must have indulged in the pastime of discovering landscapes in spots of moisture on the wall of a room.

But he went oo to take these reveries quite seriously, and the Hammer Codex, for instance, is largely devoted to a practical study of the behavior and force of water.

Leonardo was fascinated by the turbulence of water beneath a fall or around a motionless obstacle. A small marginal sketch in the Hammer Codex is compared with a modern photograph of a flow of water around a pole or reed, and note that, as Carlo Pedretti points out, each time Leonardo started working on anatomical studies his mind was likely to turn to problems related to the structure of the earth. Here one can sense an identification in fantasy of the big body of earth and the lesser body of a human, or, possibly, more to the point, the body of the mother who, like earth, produces living be-Such reveries seem quite usual and almost too obvious at a time when one is often inclined to imagine that the code of the unconscious has definitely been broken

— as though the unconscious were not sly enough to come up with a new code. In any event, the unusual thing about Leonardo is that his reveries lead to absolutely detailed and practical applications — there is no chasm between his reverie and the world.

The drawings from the Codex Atlanticus reflect an unusual approach to the human face: on one hand milk-soft too-divine madouuas and youths; on the other, monstrous figures that one tends to describe as caricatures but that I suspect are something else: intuitive representations of the monstrous potentialities of the world. The Windsor Castle drawings also express Leonardo's durable reveries about natural calamities and aquatic disasters: Floods and hurricanes abound, turbulences seem to flush entire cities into a gulf in the earth. The landscapes in the Windsor drawings are some-times close to careful geological studies, but more often their per-spective is dreamlike in a quasihinese way, with little points of interest (a bridge with figures, a boat, a house above a cliff) that help the viewer get his bearings. and they suggest a derivation not so remote after all from the spots on the wall, in which a bridge, a boat, a house sometimes suffice to create a world.

Those present did not look too happy. My first visit was to Galerie Slim, which runs two stands, one on the ground floor focusing on the art of Islamic countries - from North African costumes to Persian-derived manuscripts and miniatures from India, Pakistan and Kashmir, and the other in the basement, specializing in the Hindu and Buddhist worlds — Tibetan and Nepalese bronzes, the odd piece of wood carving from southern India.

THE ART MARKET

Looking around, one could not help thinking that his is largely a supply problem. In the Islamic field, he has two pieces desirable each in its own modest way: a Tunisian bridegroom dress of the 15th century and a northwestern Indian portrait of a raja, late but good. In the Hindu and Himalayan boutique on the floor below, there is a remarkable little bronze figure of a lama that Lostalem dates to the 16th century. The pedestal is bent and broken, telling a tale of devastated monasteries. Add a pleasing, if small and unimportant, bronze mandala from Nepal, and that is

From those dealing in furniture, reports varied. Chateau de Beaulieu, 11 Avenue Bergières, constantly adds to its original Dubuffet collection of marginal art from the insane or the solitary. The accent this year, to Oct. 3, is on Sylvain Fusco, Leon-tine, and Edmand Mousell. Leon-tine was haunted by a fantastic animal and vegetable world. Monsiel hid from all contact; in his garret he drew the world he dreaded as a storm of staring faces. Fusco seems more content in his bright

Only one Swiss museum actually owns a Goya painting, but the Pierre Gianadda Memorial Foundation in Martigny-Ville has man-aged to cajole a dozen from private collectors in Switzerland, to Sept. 26. They range from the stiffly self-conscious portrait of 10-year-old Vicente, Marquis of Osorio, to beady-eyed Queen Marie Louise and the macho guerrilla leader Juan Martin Diaz A small oil of a

"Collections-Passions," an amusing exhibit at the Musée d'Ethnographie in Neuchatel, 4 Rue St. Nicolas, to Dec. 31, suggests only a few answers to the question of why people collect. The museum started in the 18th century with a donation of Oriental curios and has been enriched ever since by civic-minded Neuchatel collectors. The displays organized by Jacques Hainard and his assistant, Cilette Keller, show how themes develop along with the owner's curiosity. Citibank Pays Tax, Penalties

Washington Past Service

WASHINGTON — Ciribank, the United States largest, has made back-tax and penalty payments to Switzerland and France totaling nearly $6.9 million as a result of questionable foreign currency transactions made by the bank's branches in those countries during the mid-1970s, the bank has reported.

The bank will pay another $3.7 million to another European country that sources said was West Germany. A Citibank spokesman said the payment was related to "normal tax disputes" between multinational companies and governments and was not due to questionable foreign exchange practices.

The revelations came in a new study of the controversial foreign exchange transactions that was prepared by the directors of the bank's parent company, Citicorp.

A more exhaustive study in 1978, triggered

A more exhaustive study in 1978, triggered by allegations of a bank employee in Paris, said that while the bank may have engaged in some foreign exchange transactions designed to evade taxes, there was no overall pattern of such transactions nor did they represent bank

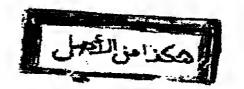

The report identified 26 questionable foreign exchange transactions in which bank branches sold corrences in order to generate losses in the two high-lax European countries and similar profits at the Citibank branch in low-tax Nassan.

The bank said that all but $1.2 million of the payments, including the one to West Germany, can be credited against U.S. taxes.

Both the Comproller of the Currency and the Securities and Exchange Commission; after lengthy investigation, declined to take any actions against Citicorp. The commission staff recommended that the commission censure Citicorp, but the commissioners disagreed.

Darwin E. Smith, chairman of Citicorp's audit committee as well as chairman and chief executive of the Kimberly-Clark Corp., Said last April that the board would reopen the investigation because of a smit filed by a shareholder on behalf of the company, demanding that damages be sought from 15 current and former Citicorp executives.

In such actions, called derivative suits, a company's directors are supposed to decide whether the snit is wise.

How to Square a Tax Increase With a Tax-Cutting Doctrine

TEW YORK — How would you go about explaining fiscal policy to the students in Economics 101 on the basis of these recent devel-

• President Reagan rides shotgun atop a red stagecoach around an arena in Billings. Mont, urges the roaring crowd to support a bill to raise taxes by $99 billion and says that if he could have corrected America's economic problems during his first year in office, he would go back to show business as a magician, adding: "You know, it might be more fun pulling rabbits out of hats than jackasses out of the way in Washington." Dyn Nofziger, a former assistant to the president, joins Rep. Jack Kemp. Republican of New York, to fight the $99-billion tax increase, then rejoins Mr. Reagan to lead the fight for it, saying his earlier opposition was "pure stupidity."
 Mr. Nofziger calls Rep. Kemp "a little fanatical," several White House aides denounce him, Larry Speakes calls him "a good man," Mr.

The president wants

both to increase taxes

and to remain a tax

Reagan calls him to the White House, the former Buffalo Bills quarterback leaves by the back door to evade reporters and photographers, and Mr. Reagan, when asked by reporters whether he thought Rep. Kemp's opposition to the tax bill stemmed from presidential aspirations, says, "I didn't know the job was up for grabs."

The White House instructs cabinet officials and political sides to play "hardball" against conservative Republican legislators who will not support the tax-increase bill. Mr. Reagan says the bill is essential to shrink the deficit, bring down interest rates and reduce unemployment, sumpt the detact, using down interest rates and remove themptoynesis, although it isn't really a record tax increase at all —83 percent of it is improving collections and closing loopholes, while only 17 percent is increasing taxes on cigarettes and a few other items.

• The president's formerly ardent supporters among the supply-siders denounce the tax bill as a sellout, say tax revenues and federal spending have dimbed as a proportion of the gross national product, so supply-side tax cuts have not failed, and warn that the tax increase bill will worsen the slump or weaken the recovery. Enstwhile critics of the president among liberal and Keynesian economists, as well as Kaufmanians and some conservative budget-balancers, praise his plan to raise taxes as

 The president and his aides insist that the tax increase still leaves him a supply-side tax curter. The $99-billion increase, Mr. Reagan says, is only a small fraction of the $350-billion tax cut for the next three years already voted by Congress. Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan says: "It leaves the Economic Recovery Tax Act for the most part untouched, and consequently it's consistent with the administration's economic program. And because of that it preserves the incentives to work, to invest and to save." Critics in the press want to know how increasing withhold-ing taxes on interest and dividends will increase saving.

The True Believers' Fear

All these developments in fiscal policy, the students in Economics 1 might be told, can be explained fairly simply.

For one thing, Reagan is still a popular performer — and not just in Billings, Mont. He is letting the politicisms in Congress know that his personal popularity can weigh more heavily than their fear of raising taxes in an election year. Further, he can hurt any Republicans by withholding aid if they don't get back in line.

Besides, budget-balancing is still a very popular thing. Polls show that 80 percent of the public wants the budget balanced. That's the logic behind the balanced-budget amendment. But the cartoonists and editorialists and Democrats and most economists are having a field day over the president's simultaneously proposing the biggest deficits in history and calling for a constitutional amendment to balance the budget a few years from now. He has to show sincerity by moving now to narrow the

Agriculture, Too, Divides U.S. and EEC

By Ward Sinclair

Washington Part Service
WASHINGTON — Chris Righton, a prosperous wheat farmer in England's central ce-real belt, does not care for it, but some peo-ple think of him as a bogeyman taking food from the table of his American farmer

Mr. Righton is a bit player in the drama of trade tension between the United States and the European Economic Community. Most of the sources of that tension are well known - defense policy, the Soviet gas pipeline, steel subsidies. Less well known, but equally central, is agriculture.

Hounded by recession at home and sagging farm sales overseas, the Reagan admin-istration, U.S. farm organizations and farm-state members of Congress have begun a fierce attack on the agricultural policies of the EEC, stirring concern on both sides of the Atlantic over the possibility of a farm

The U.S. complaint is that European gov-rements are unfairly blocking sales from the United States, partly through outright protectionism, partly through subsidies with-out which European farmers could not com-

A basic goal of EEC policy is to promote domestic social stability by keeping farmers prosperous, and by keeping them on their farms, even though those farms might not be efficient enough to be competitive with U.S.

Tarms.

The EEC achieves its aim by keeping internal prices high and shielding its farmers from foreign competition through a complicated system of price supports, common pricing, minimum import prices, import duties and export subsidies.

Unavailable in Europe

Some U.S. products — notably corn glu-ten, soybeans, vegetable fats and oils — go into the EEC duty-free because they are unavailable domestically.

However, many other U.S. products are subject to import duties and to an EEC policy of buying first from member nations. The EEC policy has encouraged production and has led to surpluses of some commodities, which are moved into world markets.

Edith Cresson and John Block in Washington last month: All was not cheery.

"A major concern here," said one U.S. official, "is that these EEC policies will lead to a rewriting of world agricultural trade practices. Under their approach, Europe would he insulated from these changes. When the duce production, the EEC members don't adjust because they are protected. It has happened with wheat, wheat flour, poultry and eggs, meat and sugar. The EEC is not re-

Wholesale Prices In U.S. Climb 0.6% As Output Declines

WASHINGTON — U.S. inflation at the wholesale level was a moderate 0.6 percent in July as a sharp increase in gasoline prices was partially offset by a decline in food prices, the Labor Department said Friday.

Forecasters in and ont of government have been surprised by the degree of monthly decline in food prices and have been forced to revise their original predictions of sharp increases ahead.
White House spokesman Larry Speakes hailed the Labor Department's Producer Price Index report as "an early indicator" that "seem to confirm we are making progress against inflation."

But some analysts noted that the prices of raw materials, which help economists to predict economic trends, went down 1 percent, eras-ing earlier signs that basic economie demand was turning up.

Meanwhile, industrial produc-

The central bank also reported that the capacity utilization rate of U.S. factories fell to 69.5 percent seasonally adjusted in July from a revised 69.7 percent in June. The July operating rate was down from 79.8 percent a year earlier.

The figure was expected to encourage hopes that the recession is coming to an end. But David Ernst of Evans Economics the Fed reports "fit in with a lot of other information that has been released recently which shows the economy

LUXEMBOURG — Banks here may soon offer different rates on large deposits of Luxembourg francs than they do on those of Belgian francs, a senior Luxerobourg banker says.

Luxembourg's banking commission is holding discussions on this proposal with banks, according to the banker, Albert Dondelinger, chairman of Banque Internationale à Luxembourg.

Such a move would reflect pressure on banks to maintain lower lending rates in Luxembourg than in Belgium, he said. It also would relate to speculation about a possible separation of the two currencies, at present held at the same value under a 61-year-old mone-rate in Luxembourg is 13 percent. Up to now banks have financed loans to Luxembourg industry through savings account and other small deposits, for which interest rates range from 7 to 10 percent. By contrast, three-month depos-rates for Belgian francs range from 10 to 13% percent for private investors, depending on the amount involved. Mr. Dondelinger said Luxembourg banks can no longer finance any expansion in lending from sav-ings accounts and small deposits. "Such deposits are no longer suffithe Belgian franc has increased inflation and otherwise harmed commerce in Luxembourg. Under the proposal for differentiated interest rates for deposits in Luxembourg or Belgian francs, depositors would be given the choice of a high interest rate and possible monetary loss or a lower interest rate tied to a potentially more stable Luxembourg franc, Mr. Dondelinger said.

In the first instance, the choice of making deposits in Luxembourg francs would probably be given only to Luxembourg residents. But this could be extended subsequently to nonresidents, Mr. Dondeiinger said, adding that he personwould favor such an exten-

Reserve's monetary policy and the problems of a small securities firm have pushed interest rates down sharply on the credit market. In an unexpected but welcome move Thursday, the Fed supplied temporary reserves to the banking system overnight by buying securi-ties from dealers and simultaneously agreeing to resell these purchases later to dealers. The Fed added reserves again Friday after-noon. Some analysts saw the move as a sign that the central bank is further loosening its grip on credit to encourage lower interest rates and help revive the economy.

The "flight to quality" was similar to the one that followed the closing of Drysdale Government Securities Inc. last May. Later Comark, a broker-dealer in securiutive who asked not to be identified, "has added to concerns over safety in terms of what you hold and whom you sell to." The Fed move prompted some analysts to assert that a further cut in the Fed's discount rate is likely to come soon. The rate, which the Fed charges on loans to banks, was has stood at 11 percent since July 30, when it was ent half a point.

Among those predicting an im-minent cut was Henry Kaufman, the chief economist at the invest-ment banking firm of Salomon Brothers. He noted that the rate on federal funds, reserves banks lend one another overnight, has slipped to between 10 and 11 percent after averaging 11 percent for several

Other analysts were not so sure a discount rate cut is near, partly because of predictions that the M-1 money supply figures for the week ended Aug. 4 will show a rise of about $2 billion. On Thursday, rates on some short-term Treasury bills fell almost ¼ point. The latest 13-week Treasury bill was quoted late Thursday at 9.23 percent bid, down from 9.93 percent Wednesday, and the bid on the latest 26week Treasury bill closed Thurs-day at 10.37 percent, down from 10.94 percent. Prices of longer-term issues surged. The 14-percent Treasury

One important source of demand for Treasury bills Thursday, according to dealers, came from cash-laden money market mutual funds. These funds, at last count, held $220 billion of assets. Treasury bills, offering top quality and a vast supply, are a prime channel of investment. This is particularly day. Government Meets on AEG Credits

BONN — Officials from the West German federal and state governments met in Bonn Friday to coordinate efforts to help AEG-Telefunken, which announced this week it would apply to the courts for a settlement with its creditors, federal government spokesman Lothar Ruehl said. The meeting ended without any announcement.

The chief aim of the talks is to agree on guarantees for credits to ease AEG's cash position and finance its restructuring, he said, but any agreement will be conditional on the management presenting a realistic plan for saving the company and on the banks extending considerable funds.

Meanwhile, it was reported from Zurich Friday that most foreign bank creditors of AEG have agreed to answer in principle by next Wednesday a request by the company that they should maintain their existing credit lines, Swiss banking sources said. Loans by foreign banks to AEG's international subsidiaries are estimated to be about 2 billion Deutsche marks ($800.16 million) of the group's total bank liabilities of more than 6 billion

Broker Files for Reorganization

NEW YORK — Justin Colin, a senior partner of Colin Hochstin Co., a Wall Street brokerage firm, has filed for voluntary reorganization in the United States Bankruptcy Court and has resigned from the firm.

Roger J. Hochstin, also a senior partner, said in a statement Thursday that the brokerage firm was not a party to the reorganization. He said the petition was based on financial losses from activities and investments principally from Mr. Colin's involvement with two now defunct West Coast commuter airlines.

He said the company was in compliance with the net capital requirements of the New York Stock Exchange and other self-regulatory organizations to which it belongs. The New York Stock Exchange said it was examining the condition of the firm as a result of the filing and that, pending completion, it had temporarily reassigned 27 stocks in which Colin Hochstin makes a market.

Rising OPEC Output Drives Prices Lower

By Milton R. Benjamin

Washington Past Service
WASHINGTON — Cash-hungry OPEC members have begun cheating massively on their production quotas, causing a slide in world oil prices world oil prices.

OPEC nations, which agreed to a production ceiling of 17.5 million barrels a day in March in an effort to dry up the oil glut that was even then depressing prices, have let production climb back to 19 million barrels a day, according to industry and government sources.

This increased availability of oil, while demand remains weak because of world recession, drove the spot-market price for Arab light crude to a summer low of $30.90 in trading Thursday. OPEC's target price for this crude is $34.

But while government and industry analysts expect to see the price of crude continue to weaken in the days ahead — perhaps even dropping under $30 a barrel in September — few expect it to fall to the low of $28 it hit during the spring glut, before OPEC set output quotas.

put quotas.

"OPEC clearly is in trouble, and I think we will see a continued weakening of oil prices." John H. Lichtblau, president of the private Petroleum Industry Research Foundation, said Thursday. "But I still doubt that the OPEC pricing structure will collapse. There is not a single OPEC member that would not be worse off under a free market price, so you have to assume they will maintain a certain amount of discipline."

While a number of OPEC members currently are producing more oil than permitted under the cartel's quota, the major violators at the moment appear to be Iran, Libya, Venezuela and the United Arab Emirates.

Iranian oil production has actually increased since last month's invasion of Iraq led to unsuccessful efforts by the Iraqi air force to bomb Iran's primary oil shipment center at Kharg Island.

center at Kharg Island.

"The Iranians are producing about 2.7 million barrels of oil a day and they're going great guns to increase production as fast as they can," a U.S. government analyst said. This number is more than double Iran's OPEC quota of 1.2 million barrels a day.

Libya also has increased its oil production to about 1.3 million barrels a day — almost double its 750,000 barrel quota — and has been trying to spur sales through a variety of barter deals, equity deals and price concessions, industry sources said.

Venezuela, which announced at last month's emergency OPEC meeting that it was not going to observe its 1.5 million barrel quota if other nations planned to continue their flagrant cheating, has increased production in the last month to more than 1.8 million barrels a day, government sources said

The United Arab Emirates, which has a quota of 1 million barrels a day, is producing between 1.1 million and 1.2 million, according to the sources.

While the price of crude has been falling steadily as a result of the current surplus, the key factor in keeping it from plunging more precipitously has been the Sandi willingness to cut back production to about 6 million barrels a day to keep the market from becoming even more flooded.

"If the others keep increasing, I think Saudi Arabia will become unwilling to try to compensate for everyone else's increase." Mr. Lichtblau said. "Bnt I think they are hoping OPEC can struggle along until the fourth quarter, when seasonal demand always increases. If world demand for OPEC oil rises to 21 or 22 million barrels a day in the fourth quarter, OPEC's situation could improve significantly."

Agriculture Trade, Too, Divides U.S. and EEC

reports that EEC shipments to the Soviet Union are up more than 200 percent since 1979. The report does not note that the United States cut its share of the Soviet market in a major way by imposing a partial grain embargo in 1980.

A frequent charge that EEC exports impinge on U.S. markets runs into statistical trouble. In wheat, for example, EEC exports doubled between 1969 and 1981 to 14 million tons, but the EEC's share of the world market dropped to 14.9 percent from 16.6.
U.S. exports, meanwhile, rose to 41.9 million tons from 16.5 million tons, and the market share moved from 38.4 to 44.8 percent. This is roughly where a Chris Righton comes in.

When a U.S. wheat farmer sends a bushel of grain to, say, the Soviet Union, he will get about $2.50 for it. Because the United States dominates world wheat trade, that price effectively becomes the world

But when Mr. Righton sends a bushel of his wheat to the Soviet Union, he will get about $4.53 for it. Same type of wheat, same quality, same purchaser, perhaps even the same export trader. The difference is that EEC policy guarantees him a price for his grain by subsidizing his effort, and U.S. farm policy does not.

An argument put forth by EEC members is that the United States, instead of complaining about the subsidy, should take steps to force up world prices. That appeals to U.S. farmers, but the Reagan administration says such a move would intrude in free markets and price U.S. farmers out of world markets.

Glores Now Off

Mr. Righton, on a visit here this year, expressed a common EEC outlook: "I don't think we're as damaging to U.S. interests as we are made out to be. We in Europe are, after all, your very best customers. Your administration is putting a smokescreen over American farmers eyes: By promising to discipline the EEC, they avoid having to do anything directly for farmers at home."

Selected Over-the-Counter

hot dispute, but the gloves have been removed. Both here and in Europe there is concern that Agriculture Secretary John R. Block's threats will turn to more contention reminiscent of the painful "chicken war" over curbs on U.S. poultry sales in the 1960s.

After Mr. Block told the House Agriculture Committee last winter that he is going to do battle with the EEC wherever and whenever it is necessary, Chairman E. (Kika) de la Garza, Democrat of Texas, admonished him to cool it. Why pick a fight with the best market for U.S. farm goods, Rep. de la Garza asked?

"We have only one alternative,"
Mr. Block said in a speech this summer. "That alternative is to deviate temporarily from our free-market stance and engage in costly short-run trade wars. If that is what it takes to achieve the principles of free markets, then we'll have to start looking more seriously in that direction."

The Europeans, for their part, seem not to be cowed. Claude Villain, EEC director general for agriculture, recently told a Minnesota audience, "Europe is not going to abandon its agriculture. It is important that you on this side of the Atlantic should realize this."

Cresson, Block Meet

Edith Cresson, the French minister of agriculture, met with Mr. Block late last month and, according to sources, delivered the same message in an acrimonious en-

Mr. Block and other administration farm spokesmen have tempered their rhetoric somewhat since June, but the tensions remain. On Capitol Hill there are moves to convert Mr. Block's talk into legislative remedies to boost U.S. farm exports with the same type of subsidies the secretary de-

Congress already has begun moving to implant a new system of export subsidies for U.S. farmers.

The Senate, for example, adopted in a budget bill early this month a provision allowing up to $190 million in payment to farmers to meet unfair competition from abroad.

RICHARD AND COSIMA WAGNER Biography of a Marriage

By Geoffrey Skelton. 319 pp. $14.95. Houghton Mifflin, 2 Park Street, Boston, Mass. 02107.

Reviewed by Joseph McLellan

WATCHING the wide and nearly endless stream of books about Wagner, one might not pay much at-tention to Geoffrey Skelton's latest effort — his fifth relating to the com-poser. But "Richard and Cosima Wagner" marks the beginning of a new era in Wagner scholarship when any scholar can have full access to millions of words of primary sources fully to a chosen few. If we are lucky, the timely arrival of this volume, which neatly skims the cream from the new material, will do something to stem the flood. We are not likely to be so lucky. The world certainly knows more than it needs to about the love and marriage of Richard and Cosima Wagner. While great question marks hang over the lives of composers ranging from Alkan to Zelenka, while scholars lament the serious gaps in our knowledge of Beethoven's life or Scott Joplin's, there is a glut of Wag-ner material. Open Cosima's volumioous diaries at random, and you can learn that a mosquito disturbed their sleep during the night of Dec. 4-5, 1881, during a sojourn in Sicily; that Wagner was critical of beards ("those emblems of the animal in men") in his lunch-time conversation the next day. and that in the evening he was so irritable that she felt compelled to "call upon the God within me to give me strength against evil spirits."

Letters Destroyed

This kind of material is available for nearly every day in the last 14 years of Wagner's life, and it can be supplemented from his own much less thorough diary and voluminous corre-spondence — though Richard's and Cosima's letters to one another were systematically and almost completely destroyed. The Cosima Wagner diaries were kept secret (with a few small exceptions) for nearly a century after she stopped writing them, but they are now published and translated, and they have the power to generate other books endlessly. Along with retellings of the epic story of the building of Bayreuth, psychoanalyses of Wagner's mad patron. King Ludwig II of Ba-varia, discussions of the trauma suffered by Cosima because she was the neglected daughter of Franz Liszt and a French countess, and new looks at the familiar story of how Wagner wooed and won the wife of a fellow musician, close friend and strong supporter, Hans von Bulow, consider the possibility of such titles as: "The Effects of Mosquitoes on Wagner's Equanimity," "Wagner on Beards" or "Cosima Wagner and the Spirits

Skelton has a head start on the competition because he got to the material first; be was the English translator of Cosima's diaries, and he must living — better, perhaps, than Cosima, who merely had to dash it off, not translate and annotate it. He certainly has details that must have been unknown to Cosima about Wagner's abortive affair with the French writer Judith Gautier near the end of his life, and he relates them conscientiously, objectively and with admirable thoroughness.

One such anecdote sums up much of Wagner's personality in its total, unconcerned self-centeredness: "In 1876 Wagner arranged for a seat in the festival theater between [Judith Gautier] and [her lover, Ludwig] Benedictus to be kept empty for him, and, slipping into it when the lights went down, he held her tightly and whispered to her: I should like to listen to all my works in your arms."
Richard and Cosima had by then been married for six years, she having borne him three children before they solemnized the union.

Skelton does not bother to stop and deplore what is deplorable in the subject of his biography, nor does he waste much time admiring again what has already been so often admired. His concern is primarily with facts: to examine them in their confusing abundance, to sift from that abundance what is most useful and interesting and to present it in a reasonable, orderly style. He has done it well, keeping the material of permaocot interest while he eliminates the mosquitoes, beards and evil spirits. The work is largely a condensation and thereby an enrichment - of the diaries he has already translated, and in addition, he has a critical detachment that is both necessary and refreshing. "The diaries," he tells us, "must be approached with a certain degree of skepticism. Cosima wrote them avowedly for the benefit of her children, and thus she strove always to present Wagner in the best possible light, and to conceal from them aspects of his behavior which may at times have caused her sorrow."

As for the importance of the marriage he chronicles, he puts it succincily and cogently at the beginning of his book: "Without this marriage the world would possibly never have seen the final products of Wagner's genius which emerged in its course: the completion of 'Der Ring der Ni-belungen,' the building of the festivaltheater in Bayreuth, the composition of 'Parsifal.' Cosima's contribution was far more than that of providing Wagner with a settled family existence in which to pursue his work, though that in itself was an important factor: she was also his active assistant in all his undertakings."

It was a collaboration nearly unique in the history of the arts, and it deserves to be widely known in approximately the amount of detail Skelton gives (L.

Glickstein Upsets Wilander in Canada

TORONTO - Shlomo Glickstein of Israel staved off four match points in a second-set tiebreaker Thursday to upset Mats Wilander and advance to the quarterfinals of the Canadian Open tennis champion-

Glickstein, the II th seed, seemed ready for a respectable but routine exit until he rallied from a 6-3 deficit in the second set and went on to a 6-7, 7-6, 6-4 triumph over the 17-year-old Swede. Glickstein is to meet Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia in the quarterfinals.

John McEnroe, the No. 1 seed, mined aside a challenge from Glenn Michibata, Canada's best player, 6-3, 7-6; Jimmy Connors, seeded second, best Ramesh Krishnan of India, the 13th seed, 7-5, 6-0, and Lendl, the third seed and defending champion, downed 14th-seeded Tim Gul-

Norris Ahead by 1 in Hartford Golf

WETHERSFIELD, Conn. - Tim Nomis, shooting his best round since joining the PGA Tour three years ago, returned an 8-under-par 63 Thursday to take the first-round lead in the Greater Hartford Open golf tournament :

Norris, who has missed 14 tournaments because of a wrist injury and was meligible to play in the PGA last week, canned eight birdles in almost flawless play over the short 6534-yard Wethersfield Country

Bill Britton and Mark Calcavecchia each scored 7-under 64s for second place. Another stroke behind and tied for third at 6-under were Ray Floyd, Kermit Zarley, Mark Pfiel and Peter Jacobson:

Landry Signs With Chicago in USFL

CHICAGO — Veteran quarterback Greg Landry said he rejected at least two firm offers from National Football League teams to sign with the Chicago Blitz of the new United States Football League.

Landry, whose signing was announced Thursday, became the second name player to join the ranks of both the USFL and the Blitz. Tim Wrightman, a former UCLA All-American, signed up last week.

The overriding reason for signing was George Allen," Landry said of the Blitz coach who has also coached successfully in the NFL Landry was heading toward his 15th NFL season when he was waived July 23 by the Baltimore Colts. He played 11 seasons with the Detroit Lions before going to the Colts in 1979.

Hockey Injury Trial Opens in Detroit

DETROIT - Lawyers for Dennis Polonich, formerly of the Detroit Red Wings hockey team and now a minor leaguer, and Wilf Paicment, formerly of the Colorado Rockies and now with the Quebec Nordiques, presented opening statements Thursday in Polonich's civil suit against Piemont and the Rockies.

Polonich filed suit after suffering a concussion, a broken nose and cuts in a confrontation with Piemont during a National Hockey League game on Oct. 25, 1978, at Detroit's Olympia Stadium, said Bruce Franklin, lawyer for Paiement and the Rockies.

"Our position is that Polonich's injuries are the result of him deliber ately high-sticking Paiement as he was being body-checked," Franklin said after opening proceedings before U.S. District Judge Horace W. Gilmore. Franklin said his client, fearful that Polonich would bit him again, "swung his stick to protect himself."

Malone Said to Seek $2 Million a Year

HOUSTON - An attorney for Moses Malone met with representatives of the new owners of the Houston Rockets for the first time Thursday in what was called an initial discussion concerning a multimillion dollar contract for Malone.

Malone, one of five unsigned free agents on the National Basketball Association team, is said to be seeking a multiyear contract that will pay him about $2 million annually. Malone was named Most Valuable Player in the NBA last season when he averaged 31.1 points and 14.7 re-

The meetings were very amicable and both sides are pledged to do eir utmost to insure the continuation of Moses in a Houston uniform, said Ray Patterson, president and general manager of the Rockets.

Moorcroft Forced Into Athens Tune-up

LONDON — David Moorcroft, holder of the world record in 5,000 meters, has bowed to an ultimatum by the British Amateur Athletic Board, which is insisting that he run at Crystal Palace on Aug. 30 as a condition of competing in the European Championships next month in

When the team for Athens was amounced this week, Moorcroft put his place in jeopardy by saying that he had no intention of meeting the board's demand that all selected athletes prove their fitness by competing at Crystal Palace. But he later backed down, saying: "A race six days before Athens forms no part of my plans. But if competing means the difference between going or not then I will run."

Coe-Ovett Duel for Mile Set in Oregon

EUGENE, Ore. - Sebastian Coe and Steve Ovett will face each other in a mile race at the Oregon International Meet here Sept. 25, an Oregon Track Club spokesman announced. The two champion runners had been doubtful for the 11-event meet because of early-season injuries. But Scott Fengelly of the sponsoring track club said it had been confirmed that both men would compete in Coe holds the world record time for the mile, 3:47.33, while Ovett has the 1,500-meter record at 3:31.36.

Sportswriter Fitzgerald Was Not Wasting Time

By George Vecsey
New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Two items crossed the desk within 24 hours of each other last week - one sad, one silly. The sad item was the death of Ray Fitzgerald, sports co-lumnist of The Boston Globe, who mixed his own native wit with information he learned in press boxes and locker rooms. The silly item was a letter from The Professor, who teaches history and philosophy at a major univer-sity and who does not think sports journalists should waste their time talking to athletes because "what athletes have to say about their performances is almost uniformly

The Professor was not in any way referring to the work of Ray Fitzgerald, yet there is some connectioo in my mind, because Ray was one of us who spent a fairly high portion of his life scribbling down quotes from athletes. The body of his work indicates he was not wasting his time,

Ray was only 55 when he died, a quiet, athletic-looking man with a nose that looked as if it had absorbed a few bad-hop ground balls in its time. He had been a star athlete in western Massachusetts, but we knew him as a good companion while watching the games and trudging to the locker rooms after-

He had a keen wit that did not always depend on the words of others. One of the best columns about the 1981 baseball strike was written by Fitzgerald, who tracked down the last baseball fan in

The last baseball fan in America was some nut holed up in a seedy apartment in Boston, savoring the relics of the old days - record books, souvenirs, newspaper clippings. The recluse was clearly a threat to society, harboring a vesti-gial love for a forgotten sport, and in Fitzgerald's rollicking myth the fan was holding the police at bay by firing old autographed balls down the stairwell.

Fitzgerald's point was that America was running out of interest in baseball. Within a week of his column, the strike was settled, which indicated the owners had also sensed the urgency of getting back to business

But Fitzgerald was not satisfied with his own point of view. He knew — even if The Professor does not - that it is important for sports journalists to cover the trenches. Last fall, Fitzgerald witnessed Brian Kelley of Holy Cross College suffer three punctures of the intestine in a football game against Boston College.

Not So Much Fun

Fitzgerald later wrote about his qualms: "Watching a fleet pass re-ceiver cut across the middle and, while in full stride, leap for and catch a pass is one of the most exciting and entertaining moments in football...That's why the NFL highlight film with the bongo drums makes for such an cater-taining half-hour. You sit there with the beer and the popcorn and exclaim as each receiver gets knocked higher than the last, and it's all such a harrel of fun.

"But the bongo drums disappear when you witness a Brian Kelley type collision. When you see the player lying motionless on the field, when you watch the orange and white ambulance heading for the hospital, when you hear about the emergency operation, football suddenly isn't very exciting at all." Then Fitzgerald did something The Professor thinks is unneces-sary: He interviewed the athlete (in the hospital, in this case). He asked Kelley whether he wanted to play football any more. The column would have been incomplete without the young man's response.

"I suppose you begin to question your priorities," Kelley said.

"After the concussion I was a little squeamish about going over the middle, but if you're a wide receiver, that's part of the job. They told me I must have breathed in just as the helmet hit me and that's what caused the punctures. It was a freak injury.

The need to understand the point of view of others, the need to confirm facts, is what keeps journalists checking their sources, whether covering a war or politics or even something as marginal as

It was hard to cover the trenches during the recent World Cup in Spain. The world soccer authorities provided no access to players after games, which was a shock to an American journalist used to interviewing athletes after the end of a game. I would have loved to ask Paolo Rossi why the Italian of-fense had suddenly clicked, or Diego Maradona why he and Argen-tina had fizzled, but the only athlete who came out for an interview was 40-year-old Dino Zoff of Italy Most soccer writers seemed quite content with observing the game, banging out a few com-ments, and heading out the door. After I grumbled in print about lack of access to the players, along came the letter from The Profes

The practice of interviewing players after every sporting event in the United States — and building stories around their quotes — has wrecked sports journalism in America," he wrote, adding: "the real job of a reporter should be to be a critic, not simply a transcriber of inane comments by athletes."

Often enough the answers are inane — partly because athletes are conditioned to tossing off a few clichés into microphones and tape recorders. But the print journalists, the good ones, like Ray Fitzgerald, hang behind and keep trying to find out what it's like to be an athlete, why games were won and lost

The ability to mix facts and quotes is important for any good journalist. Sports columnists also need a sense of humor and personal perception. Ray Fitzgerald had

The Making of a Best Seller was a good advance in orders, and the book was a main selection of the Book-of-the-Month Club. The promotion continues in New York. The publisher said that he found such tours worthwhile investments of time and money. The book is in the No. 7 position on The New York Times best seller list. White's literary agent, Julian Bach, said that the whole process of creating the sort of book White writes does not simply mean covering a presidential campaign and writing about it quickly. With research beginning a year before a campaign, the campaign itself, and the writing afterward, the White books have taken about two and a half years each. "That's why Teddy has always done a huge amount of promotion," Bach said. The record this time shows that the Sunday review in The Times did not hurt him. Maybe it set off a lot of talk." The un-shy anthor of the "Making of the President" series is something of a pioneer in promoting his books. In fact, his career almost spans the history of such efforts to reach more readers through broadcasting.

'My Kind of Audience'

He had special praise for the radio and television programs on the public broadcasting network that devote time to books and authors. "That's my kind of audience," he said "Frank Mankiewicz has done a wonderful job with National Public Radio." Mankiewicz is president of NPR. White found that interviewers ranged from those who had done their homework, to hosts who simply billboarded the book and took off on tangents, to the ingenues who would cover the microphone and whisper, "What should 1 Not all authors are willing to subject themselves to a tour or be interviewed on the air. And there are some who do not get asked by publishers to do so.

"I don't think we ever proposed a tour to Aldous Huxley or Thornton Wilder or E.B. White," Bessie said.

Jane Becker Friedman, director of promo-tion at Alfred A. Knopf, is aware that several respected authors, among them John Hersey and Jonathan Schell, still believe that a book should speak for itself. Schell would not tour or go on the air for "The Fate of the Earth," and Anne Tyler, author of "Dinner at the Homesick Restaurant," does not give interviews. Both works made the best seller list and were Book-of-the-Month Club selections. On the other hand, John Updike will give some interviews but does not go on the road, and the late John Cheever, who was once reti-cent, more recently liked interviews. Fried-man said, "Mr. Cheever enjoyed doing the Dick Cavett show and felt it was a significant appearance for him."

White offered his opinion of the promotional situation for an author: "Once the book could take care of you; now you have to take care of the book."

Tchaikowsky, who died of cancer June 26 at age 46, has be-queathed his skull to the Royal Shakespeare Company for use in the graveyard scene in Hamlet, an RSC spokeswomen said in London. "It is currently sitting in a cardboard box in Stratford," she said. "It has been treated with preservatives and will be used in our next Hamlet production." The RSC's joint artistic director, Terry Hands, said that Tchaikowsky (no relation to the Russian composer) had always wanted to be an actor. "He was passionate about Shake-" speare and attended many performances at the RSC," Hands said.
"We are honored by his bequest." Tchaikowsky was born in Warsaw, lost his parents during World War II and was smuggled to France, where he studied at the Paris Conservatoire. He won the 1955 Chopin Prize in Warsaw, made his U.S. debut in 1957 and settled in England soon after, becoming a British citizen. He devoted the last years of his life to composition. * * *

"I shall be a dancer, choreographer and dance director and will have to live in Paris six months of the year, from September, 1983 — though 1 feel most at home in New York," he said at a news conference. Nureyev will make a U.S. tour with the Zurich troupe next spring, to Washington, Chicago and probably New York.

The modern idea of a gold stan-dard for money resulted from a mistake by Sir Isaac Newton in 1717, according to a former U.S. State Department official. Newton was not only a scientist but also master of the British mint under King George L Richard N. Cooper, a professor of economics at Harvard and undersecretary of state for economic affairs in the Carter administration, writes about New-ton's goof in the Brookings Papers on Economic Activity, published by the Brookings Institution. Cooper said, in an article attacking a return to the gold standard, that Newton "did not depreciate gold"

In life, André Tchaikowsky har- enough when he set the official silver price of the gold guinea at 21 silver shillings and thereby inadvertently continoed to drive the newly reminted full-bodied silver coins out of Britain." Newton's mistake was an illustration of Sir Thomas Gresham's law that bad money drives out good, "leaving only worn silver coins to circulate as means of payment with the overvalued gold coins," Cooper wrote. "This error in judgment established the gold standard in practice." Cooper said that the gold standard was seen as part of Britain's success as an economic and military power in the 19th century, and that that view influenced other countries, especially Germany and later Japan, to adopt in. The United States went on the gold standard in 1879 or 1900, depending on which economist you believe. Since 1971, the dollar has not been convertible into gold Now, Cooper said, only Switzer-land requires a gold backing for its banknotes.

> The Australian pop group the Bee Gees will not play together again until 1984, group member Barry Gibb says. Gibb said at Heathrow Airport that he and his brothers Robin and Manufes were splitting up for 18 months. We felt it was about finie we did our own thing, he said. Tim going to make a solo LP, and so is Robin. and we won't appear as a group again until 1984. But there's no again mul 1984. But there's no question of the Bee Gees breaking up for good. We are very solid as a group." Gibb was returning to London from Miami with his wife, Linda, and their three children. * * *

Margaret Trumen Daniel, the only child of Harry S. Tramen, says Nancy Reagan is the most beautiful first lady since Element Roosevelt and has been deeply hurt by the unjust criticism she has -received." Daniel rated the first ladies since Eleanor Roosevelt in an article for Parade magazine. She gave all the presidents' wives good marks, but saved her highest praise for Mrs. Roosevelt and her own mother, Bess Truman, now 97. Mrs. Roosevelt "had the greatest direct impact on our country," Daniel writes. But, she adds. "I truly believe that Mother did her job the best." Mrs. Truman, who has been in ill health for the last several months, lives in Independence, Mo.

NEW YORK — "What you're trying to do is the hootchy-kootchy to get them into the tent," said Theodore H. White, describing the circus-like act that some authors go through during a radio-television tour to promote their books. "It's demeaning and degrading. You have to strip yourself threadbare like a piece of fabric. But it's necessary because we are living through a period of cultural discontinuity in the United States — look at the areades with Atari guns and the 'E.T.'

He had recently come off the circuit after more than a month on the road. Several hundred other authors undertake the grand (or petit) tour every season, selling their books on talk shows with the eventual aim of driving listeners into the bookstores - but few do so

He was relaxing with a vodka in his East Side brownstone, still groggy after appearing on programs in 15 cities — with the familiar plaint: "If it's Tuesday, this can't be Dallas, it must be Fort Worth" — having four or five interviews a day, finding to his surprise that some of the interviewers had actually read
